

Dreaming Our Future - Panel discussion with Kari Sansgaard, Lelelewa Tano Rikiho, AlejAndro Anastasio and Ahmed Abdelnaby

What does it mean for people of faith and goodwill to actively dream the future? How do present dreams affect our present reality, our thoughts, words and deeds? Dreaming is essential to creating a better world. Panelists from various world religions will share their dreams for the future. Time will also include questions from/conversations with participants. All are welcome!

Kari Sansgaard has been a Lutheran pastor for more than twenty years. She currently serves as a hospice chaplain for Keystone Hospice. Kari has two daughters and has a heart for interfaith conversations. She has been connected to the local Healing Our Future interfaith group since its inception in 2011.

Lelelewa Tano Rikiho is a Minister and Elder of the Amaraji Maha Marai. She lives in the mountains, off the grid, loves animals and nature, and is a grandmother of nine, song writer, singer, and medicine drummer.

AlejAndro Anastasio has been a Dzogchen Vajrayana Buddhist for the past 16 years. He is the Director and Authorized Dharma Teacher at the Boise Dharma Center. He aspires to offering teaching people can use in their everyday life. AlejAndro is known for his clear, humorous, and easy to understand teachings of Buddhism.

Ahmed Abdelnaby holds a Ph.D. in Mechanical Engineering from The University of Idaho. He joined Micron Technology in Boise as a Process Development Engineer in April 2012. Dalia, his wife, and he are active members in the Islamic Center of Boise and in charge of outreach activities between the Islamic community and other faith-based organizations in the Treasure Valley
